ONE MORE THING: An old-stock bourbon beauty! Las Mercedes was planted by producer Francisco's grandmother in 1860, with bourbon variety, like most Central America coffee farms at that time. Come the 1970's & 80's, many producers across the continent replanted with higher yielding, more disease resistant varieties, but El Salvador was in civil war so farms like Las Mercedes remained planted with their original bourbon. They became renowned for quality but remained vulnerable to disease & were hit hard by the Coffee Leaf Rust outbreak of 2012. Like many El Salvador farms, however, they're now back stronger than ever. Raise a cup to that!
