ONE MORE THING: The welcome change of policy by the Tanzania Coffee Board allows us again to have access to small independent growers and producers whose investments in quality can be maintained through to export. You may remember one of our faves, Medson Haonga who was one of the first coffee farmers in southern Tanzania to have a Penagos eco-pulper on his property which gives him the opportunity to process his own coffee, and his neighbour's coffee with very little water use. He is also able redistribute and reuse the coffee cherry pulp as a fertilizer for the other food crops he and his neighbours grow, like maize.
